Part 1: The recruiting industry in 2015

Hiring volumes and budgets buck the trend of stagnation, heating up for the first time in four years. With the widening gap between budgets and hiring, talent acquisition leaders must be poised to scale their operations. Doing more with less is more important now than ever before. Competition and compensation continue to be the top obstacles for attracting talent, forcing recruiting leaders to get smart and use data-driven techniques in their pursuit of top talent. Companies small and large face their own unique challenges in recruiting, and therefore must play to their own competitive advantages. Broader technology advancements have also begun to disrupt the talent industry, setting the stage for a dynamic and exciting future for recruiting.

Hiring volume and budgets heat up

US company hiring volumes and budgets buck the trend of stagnation, heating up for the first time in four years. As the gap widens between hiring volume and budgets in 2015, recruiting leaders must scale their operations, do more with less, and invest wisely.

50% of US CXOs believe that overall staffing levels are increasing, according to a Sept 2014 LinkedIn Economic Confidence Outlook study. The C-suite is in touch with the talent pulse of their companies.

“How has your organization’s budget for recruiting solutions changed from last year?”
Organizational priorities: Top priorities are sourcing and quality of hire

Sourcing and quality of hire are top priorities

US and global talent acquisition leaders agree that sourcing skilled talent is the lynchpin of any successful recruiting organization. Improving quality of hire is the second highest priority of US and global companies.

Small and large companies differ

Scrappy small companies are significantly more likely to prioritize passive talent recruitment. Large US companies are significantly more likely to prioritize diversity recruiting. We define small businesses as organizations with 500 or fewer people.

1. Recruiting/sourcing highly-skilled talent
   - Global: 46%
   - US: 49%

2. Improving quality of hire

“Think about your talent acquisition organization’s top priorities for 2014. Which of the following choices would you consider to be the most important areas of interest for your organization?”
Competitive threats: Biggest obstacle to landing talent in 2015 is competition

In US, competition is top obstacle to hiring

Competition is the number one obstacle US companies face in attracting top talent, outstripping compensation.

US companies more concerned about competition than global companies

Competitive pressures are more of a threat to US companies than to global companies. US companies need to step up their recruiting game to compete and win.

“What are your company’s biggest obstacles to attracting the best talent?”

Competitive threats

Retention, passive talent, and employer brand are the top competitive threats in the US and globally.

- Improve employee retention: 28% (US) vs 29% (Global)
- Increase focus on passive talent: 22% (US) vs 18% (Global)
- Invest in their employer brand: 21% (US) vs 29% (Global)

Part 2: Sourcing
Part 2: Sourcing

Just as a championship sports team is defined by its players and coaches, a successful company is defined by its talent. But where are companies finding talent today?

In 2015, sourcing just isn’t what it used to be. Recruiters’ use of social professional networks skyrocketed to become the number one source of quality hires. Passive candidate recruiting is popular not only in the US, but also in economic powerhouse countries like China and India. Wiley US small businesses have also figured out how to poach passive talent. For many, it’s central to their recruiting strategy. Passive talent accounts for a whopping 75% of all professionals worldwide.

As candidates become increasingly mobile, companies are also embracing mobile recruiting. The mobile revolution is in full swing in the talent industry, and will continue to be a big theme in 2015.

Top source for quality hires: Professional networks

Social professional networks rise to become top source for quality hires

Social professional networks are the most important and fastest growing source of quality hires in the US, increasing 57% over the past 4 years. Get ahead of this trend by tapping into social professional networks for quality hires.

US companies heavily reliant on social recruiting

Compared to other companies globally, US companies source quality hires significantly more from social professional networks, and significantly less from search & staffing agencies. As international markets evolve, this trend is one worth watching.

“Think about the key quality hires that your organization (placed/made) in the past 12 months. Which of the following were the most important sources for those key positions?”
Top source for quantity: Company career sites

Career sites produce highest quantity of hires

Company career sites currently produce the highest quantity of hires in US companies. However, quantity doesn’t always equal quality. Recruiting leaders need to manage the application process to ensure they get both quantity and quality.

How US channels for quantity of hire differ

Social professional networks, referral programs, and career sites are more popular for quantity of hires in the US than globally.

How global channels for quantity of hire differ

Globally, search and staffing firms and student recruiting programs are sources for significantly larger quantities of hires than in the US.

“How significant were each of the following as a source of white collar professional (candidates placed by/hires for) your organization in the past 12 months?” Showing % with over 15% of hires.
Sourcing: There are a handful of sources that provide both quality and quantity.

5 sources of hire for quality and quantity

- Employee referral programs
- Internet job boards
- Social professional networks
- Company career website
- RPOs, Search & staffing firms

65% of US talent leaders believe they’re not doing a great job tracking return on investment on sources of hire. There’s lots of room for improvement.

As the gap between hiring volume and budgets widens, it’s time to invest and optimize the sources that return both the best quality and quantity of candidates.

“How significant were each of the following as a source of white collar professional hires for your organization in the past 12 months?” (>15% quantity of hires)

Sourcing: Small businesses recruit differently

Sources of quality hires differ for small businesses

Small businesses are more reliant on internet job boards and less reliant on internal hires than their large company counterparts are. With less time and fewer internal people and positions, small business recruiting leaders need to find ways to help talent find them.

Small businesses highly focused on passive talent

Small businesses are significantly more likely to focus on passive candidate recruitment than large companies are. With fewer resources and less time, smart small businesses get scrappy and strategic, identifying passive candidates with the right skills and cultural fit.

Sourcing: Quality is most valuable hiring metric

Quality of hire is most valuable metric

Global and US recruiting leaders agree that quality of hire is the most valuable metric for measuring recruiting team performance, followed by time to fill and hiring manager satisfaction.

Small businesses value quality of hire

In the US, small businesses value quality of hire significantly more than large companies do. Large companies value time to fill as a performance metric significantly more than small businesses do.

“What is the single most valuable metric that you use to track your recruiting team’s performance today?”

US Recruiting Trends 17
Sourcing: Quality of hire measured by retention

Retention is top way to measure quality of hire

Quality of hire is widely considered the holy grail of recruiting metrics. Today, global and US recruiting leaders agree on the top 3 ways to measure quality of hire. US leaders lean toward retention and hiring manager satisfaction while global companies favor new hire performance evaluations.

Company size impacts how quality is measured

In the US, large companies favor turnover and retention as a quality of hire metric while small businesses favor hiring manager satisfaction.
