

Five Ways to Take Your Workforce Strategy to New Heights

Introducing Company Report

Finding answers to workforce hiring and planning questions can be challenging. What skills should you be investing in? How can you improve employee retention? Which companies and schools are your competitors recruiting from?

Company Report helps you answer these questions with data-driven insights, helping you make strategic decisions about hiring, training and retaining talent, and giving you insight into companies of interest.

Read on to discover five ways to use Company Report to sharpen your workforce strategy.

How to Use Company Report to Improve Your Workforce Strategy

1. Search a Company

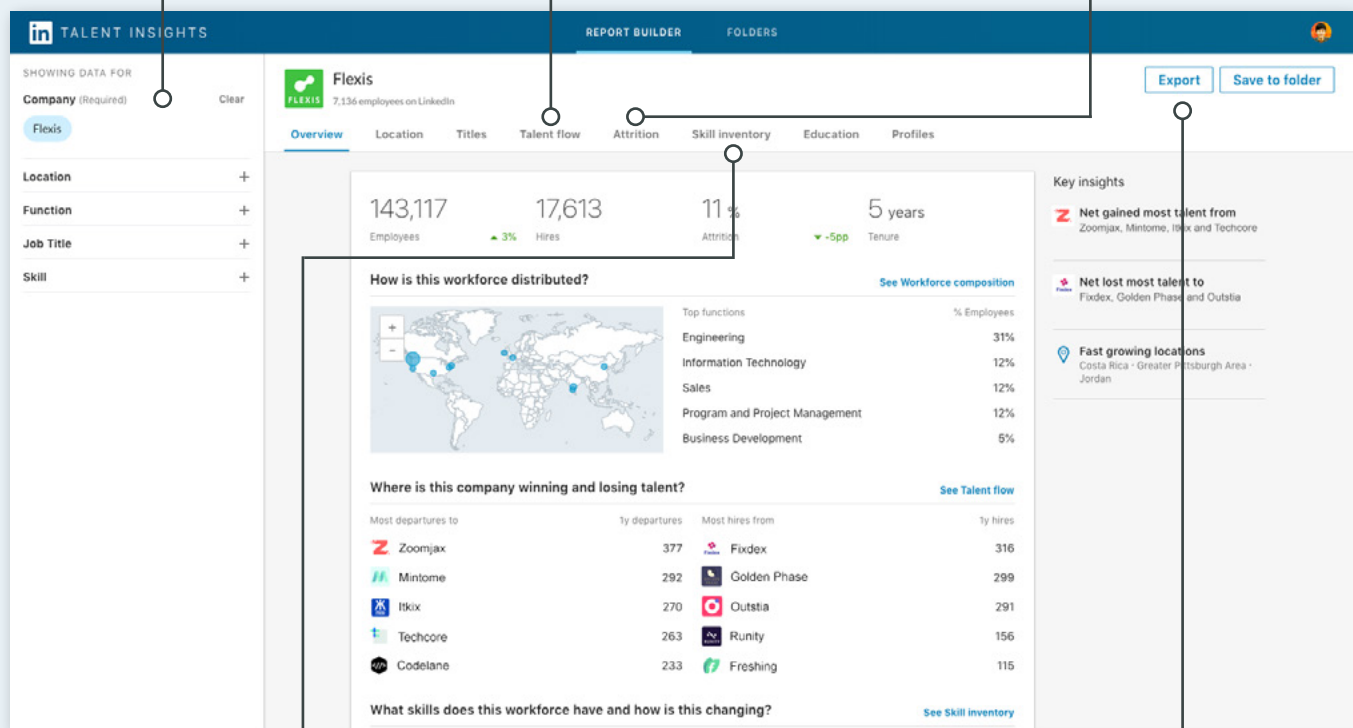

Search your own company in the Report Builder and filter by location, function, job title or skill to explore your workforce composition. Or, search a company of interest to understand their workforce structure and keep tabs on your competition to identify opportunities.

2. Discover Talent Flows

See how specific talent flows are trending and discover the strengths and weaknesses of competitor workforces, by seeing which companies and industries they're hiring from and losing talent to.

3. Uncover Attrition Patterns

Compare attrition rates across companies and drill down by function, identifying internal focus areas and external opportunities to attract talent.

4. Identify Skill Growth & Gaps

Search company skill distribution and growth to understand which skills are abundant and where they're investing, helping you anticipate their trajectory.

5. Share Your Findings

Export the data to easily share your findings with leadership and influence workforce decisions with data-informed insights.

Company Report answers critical questions to help you shape your workforce strategy and make smarter talent decisions.
